

7.
Sunday evening.

I have just been up with Mamma bed. Mamma was down at church this morning in the Tabernacle and it was too much for her & yesterday she would insist on straightening up in her room and superintending Cenny. Oh Ellen, I would give my right hand almost every day if corners didn't worry Mamma so much.
It almost drives me wild somedays & really I think that it is corners that keeps Mamma back somewhat. Amy's slovenly methods make her nervous & she worries over this & that about the house. Oh, I do wish she could drop the housekeeping from her mind. I suppose if I would take it she might but she'd worry just the same.

But of course she can't just do nothing and yet she ought not to do anything & what is to be done. Of course her nervous condition makes her think how she isn't accomplishing anything and worry over that.

Here now she has done too much and has her trouble again & I simply couldn't prevent it & can't do anything now.

I simply feel distressed all the time because I know how everyone is anxiously waiting for Mamma dear to get well. If you have any suggestions I was going to say tell me, but it will worry Mamma that I wrote I suppose.

You know we are having revival meetings here under
Mr. Lyon. A big wood tabernacle. Which twenty seven hundred was put up for the meetings on the campus. Mr. Lyon is a man of great power and very agreeable. They are to last three weeks more.

Dr. Washington Gladdy gives the Washington's Birthday address in the Tabernacle. The party is on Monday evening the only night there are not meetings.

Judge Lindsey was fine.
He has certainly done a wonderful work. It is better than a sermon to hear of it.

Do ask for us all here that we each may do our best. Ask for Mamma. What joy in doing nothing for it is so hard for her. She is most beautifully patient and hopeful and we all must keep her so. I am so incompetent and melancholy it makes me sick.

Well I must stop lovingly and Mary please. Squintle.

Mamma had
the circular
about the foreign
trips sent you.
Read carefully.
She thinks it will be possible for you to go in the cheapest.
