Dear May:- You see we use the same kind of paper you do. Every body I know uses it, and all get it from the same place.

Yes, Leoral's rugs were very pretty, & she liked them. I don't know why you think I don't need or want any.
Of course I both need & want some, but I don't like to be greedy. If you should send one, or any, I would probably give it to Evelina, for the love stitches as well as the rug need.

I thought much of you, also about you on aed before the 28th but did not get so much as a postal even, written to wish you all, ^{or} any of my loving

Do not return M.S.L.

desires for you now and always.

It happened today that Mrs. Maitland and Miss Graybill had four in to afternoon tea. Mrs. Hanna was one, and I told her how you wanted to hear Dr. Hanna again. She seemed much pleased - and in fact was really cordial & companionable in the little company.

I have never written to Mrs. Nightingale since her husband's death, but I heard that she had returned to her people in England.

How nice that Joe & Clara, and J. M. & her family could take that drive. They certainly get the good of a machine. I used to enjoy having the Prices &c. drive down from Leiceland, and miss them very much. Elden & Leval were so disappointed not to see them again!

I often enjoy lunch with you, in thought, & Evangelina and the rest,

Yes, the table linen was hemmed, and beautifully hemmed, so no thread showed.
It was perfect. You never saw a small boy happier with his first knife than Selden was with your present. The tool was sort of an awl, I guess, that punched holes very easily, a spring or something in the handle. I believe it is called a puncher.

I'll let you know when we get Evie's beautiful dish marked.

Thank you very much for Ellen Brickstein's letters. I was so glad to read them. Has Cousin Joe Albright failed in business, or what?

and how dreadful about Horace!
So strong and capable as he always was.

I have hastily answered your letter, & am sending it with a small part of the enclosures to S. & C. to keep them in touch, for they had (or S. rather, for all was now to C) just got re-acquainted with the family. C. is really one of us - accepts all Selden's relatives & friends & interests just as they come.

I am awfully behind in all my letter writing and must shorten every one's answer till I get caught up.

Love, much much, to you & Gertie, & don't leave Evangeline & Lusia out for I love them & their families. Ever yours
Ellie
