My dear Ellie

I must write & thank you for the express box received from Bristol a short time since.
I am very kind to send such a lot of things, & I am sure I must not tell you how greatly I appreciate them. The two best ones lifting, & putting down, dicing, tossing, continuing, & all the other varieties of work that compose a move. It seems to me that one move more will about finish me. But — after all this toil is over, isn't it a blessing, & rest, & comfort to have such a home as Oxford to go to.

With the dear, loving, unselfish people there. Dear Oxford! Even with all its sad changes, it seems a little beyond any other place as home.

Miss Wheeler is calling me, so, as she runs across the house, I must bid you good evening, just, again thanking you.
Love from Sister
Caroline dresses, will just save my getting them, as "Miss Wheeler's wardrobe" is now quite perfect, and she has on short-clothes. I am very much obliged, & gratified for them & for all the things.

You have had my dear heart-felt sympathy in Jan Parker's & mine. & I really can almost achieve as I can't feel your true steps, & you

Carrie-
