

My dear husband,

This morning's mail brought the enclosed postal from Mr. Whitaker, & as he says he has sent a duplicate to B. (which you will receive no doubt on arriving there,) I will not telegraph you.

I hope this is right, for it certainly seems to me that the telegram would be superfluous.

I have just finished reading a chapter in "Mouthful of Bread" to the four children.

"The Moravian" came in this morning's mail, with your article all right. No extra copies have come.

Uncle Selden's bill for wedding cards from Nathan Lane's sons also came & is only eleven dollars!

All well & no accidents, &
the baby still asleep.

Your own loving Ellie

11 ²⁰ Am.

Friday.

Oxford, N. J.